BESTS FOR THE SEASON.

1. Fatten hogs early, as it can be done easier in mild weather, than during the cold weather of the latter part of November and December, and besides early fattenings save always brings better prices in market. Hogs are now being ad-dressed for packing, and the time continues until the last of June, which will be soon enough to insure a good weight and desire to sell, will bring as good a price here, in all probability, as it will six weeks hence, with the advantage of a saving in feed, if they are too fat, feed plentifully with such food as follows:

II. If corn is not yet cut, or killed by frost, eat it when struck in the field until dry; then knock and strip it. Take care that it is not put up in a wet condition, in poorly ventilated cribs, as in that case it will be apt to mold. Save all your stalks, leaves and husks for feed, as they will assist materially in drying out the short crop of hay.

III. Plow wherever and whenever the land is dry enough, especially stiff clay soils, as it will assist the frost during winter to subdue old grass stems, and help to decompose them. It generally requires the plow to prevent the decay of vegetable matter. If lime is liberally applied to it, a mixture of lime and ruminous manure is formed by a chemical combination, producing a sooty substance, which aids decomposition. In no case should lime be applied to land in its wet state. It should be dry, and placed in heaps in dry and level places. By a mixture of lime in the heaps, decomposition will more rapidly go on, and form an excellent compost. Ashes and fresh horse dung are also a most excellent addition to such compost heaps, as they neutralize the acid, and the other favors heating and decomposition. This mud should never be spread over the land until the time of plowing, so that it may be immediately placed under, and incorporated with the soil; otherwise it will lay together, and form a substance nearly as hard as unbaked bricks, which will require much time to shake or pulverize.

IV. The best and most available kind of manure found in the cities, which have evidently been cast the beds of rivers or streams—It is a black color, soft to the touch, and intermixed with small shells. A bed of sterile clay generally lies between this and the vegetable soil. This earth, when dry, is perfectly sterile, but when well mixed with the soil, it renders it exceedingly fertile. It is composed of the remains of plants, fishes, and shells, deposited in fine sand, which has been covered with deposition over it, frequently of three or four feet in thickness. Such deposits might be found of almost inestimable value, in any place where the surface indicates the bed of a river or pond, existing in some remote age. This earth contains, on an average, fourteen parts of organic carbonate of lime, five of humus, and forty of fatty clay. This substance is of the richest kind of manure, and exists, undoubtedly, in many parts of the country where it is least expected. It may be used to good advantage in combining with straw manure, or any kind of manure used without composting, stable manure should be applied to the soil, after two or three months have been raised. If farmers would turn their attention more to these native manures, which are cheap, and less to guano, and other foreign fertilizers, they would find a broad margin of profit in their ledgers.

SAFE AT LAST.
No More Explosions!

Greenough's Carbonic Acid-Gas,
Non-Explosive Burning Fluid.

HAVING purchased the exclusive right in manufacture and sale of Greenough's Non-Explosive Burning Fluid and Camphene, for Tiffs and vicinity, I now offer the same at a price less than I have ever offered it before. What system of testing before the introduction of Greenough's Fluid, was adopted in the New England states, for the past two years, and has undergone no investigation before this date, I am constrained to say, is still in use. I am convinced that it may be safe, with perfect safety, and will not explode under any circumstances in the ordinary use of Burning Fluid. I have fully tested it, and can assure you that it is safe, and will possess all the virtues of the system before every family.

Safe and Brilliant Light!
Those who have ever seen it prefer to burn oil, and are now using it in preference to gas.
